Abstract: This paper examined the role of the libraries and librarians in promoting national security in Nigeria. The objective of the paper was to show that the libraries and librarians can contribute effectively in the fight against terrorism through effective propaganda; collection and dissemination of information; mobilizing the citizens through civic education and bridging of ideological and religious divides. The paper however stressed that national security is an all-embracing term that deals with the protection of the interest of a nation. It is in this regard that the libraries have a social responsibility in national security. It recommended more government funding to achieve this task and re-organization of training curriculum of future librarians to include national security.

Keywords: Role, libraries, Librarians; Terrorism; National Security, Nigeria.

I. Introduction

The libraries as a repository of knowledge has changed its horizon over the years to become not only a place or building but a thoroughfare through which information can be delivered to people, no matter the location. Since the human race from evolution to date has metamorphosed in many ways, services to man should also change to reflect his present place and status in today's society. This is to say that the libraries, librarians and indeed all information practitioners have a role to play to term the spate of insurgency and terrorism in Nigeria. Issa (2003) observed that economic and national power and status are considered to be dependent upon the wide dissemination and use of information and knowledge. Even though the onus of libraries and information services rests on the librarian and information scientists, there is also the need to collaborate with others in bringing optimum information services to the public. September (1993) stresses the need for cooperation between libraries and information professionals and educators as a requirement for establishing integrated information literacy programmes.

Terrorism and militant insurgency around the world has assumed an alarming dimension. The bombing of the United States Embassy in Kenya and the air craft carrier USS Cole in Yemen, 12th October, 2000 appear to have been a catalyst for the sequence of events to follow. The attack killed 17 US sailors and injured 40 with Ibrahim al-Thaw and Abdullah al-Misawa as masterminds (http://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/dates/stories/october/12/newsid_4252000/4252400.stm). Since the 9th September 2001 bombing of the twin towers, world trade centre in New York and the target of the Pentagon in the United States of America by Al Qaeda, terrorist attacks have been on the rise around the world. The stories of terrorist attacks by Taliban in Afghanistan are just a mention of few. All these were foreign to Nigeria and Nigerians until the attacks by Movement for the Emancipation of the Niger Delta (MEND) and the Islamic sect Boko Haram (Western Education is Nonsense) in Nigeria. The Boko Haram sect believes that western education is ‘‘Haram’’ an Arabic word for forbidden/sin. And it is a duty to all members to clean society of all influence of western education. Activities of the groups spread across kidnapping of people; blowing up oil pipelines; bombing the United Nations building in Abuja, (26th August, 2011), the Nigerian Police Headquarters in Abuja (16th June, 2011), the Christmas day bomb blast at St Theresa Catholic Church, Madalla (25th December, 2011), AIG Police headquarter, Kano (20th January, 2012) and Army 1st Division Base, Kaduna (7th February, 2012) and blowing up of Agip gas pipeline. All these and several others in Jos; Damaturu, Sapele; Yenogoa; Bauchi, Kano and Kaduna has brought Nigeria and Nigerians to the reality of terrorism and the need for national security in Nigeria’s national discourse (Aghambu&Okeke, 2012) http://www.punchng.com/business/apointments-managements/nim-lamentsincessant-bombings-in-nigeria; http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/12/5/us-nigeria-blast-idUSTRE7BO030201111225). Recently parts of Benue and Nasarawa States witnessed the worst form of terrorism in the history of the area in which hundreds of lives and property was lost. Today the terror groups have resulted to kidnapping school children and planting bombs at densely populated areas (Chibok girls, Nyannyan and Jos terminus market) readily comes to mind. It is in this regard that the libraries have a role to play in national security in Nigeria.
II. Literature Review

National security loosely defined refers to the protection of the interests of a country (http://dictionary.reference.com/browse/national+security). National security therefore embraces several elements that cut across military, education, economic, social, religious and political sense to mention a few. There is very little literature that deals directly with the subject of this work. Some others are only gleanings around the subject that can breed insecurity and the roles of libraries and librarians in such context. Starr (2004) “libraries and national security: a historical perspective” dealt with response of libraries and librarians to the United States Patriot act of 2001. The article contended that the act was unjust and libraries have a responsibility to protect right to free speech and access to information which the act prevents. Omopupa (2003) observed that libraries have a role to play in promoting peace and unity. The article happed on the need for information circulation leading to rural development and food security as a means to achieve this. Kargbo (2004) examined the role of librarians in post war reconstruction in Sierra Leone. It recommended Librarians widening their scope of services to help make information available to people. Ndagana and Ogunrombi (2006) pointed out that Libraries create opportunities for youths to be employed especially in restive communities which in turn are a background for national security.

III. Objectives

The objectives of this paper specifically are:
1. To reveal that the libraries, information centers, all information professionals and librarians as information collectors and disseminators have a role to play in the war on terrorism in Nigeria.
2. To prescribe information provision as a crucial tool in national security.
3. To x-ray the role of the libraries and librarians in national security.
4. To stress that the fight against terrorism and insecurity can be better fought and won through employing the services of information managers like Librarians.

Traditional Roles of the libraries and Librarians

Traditionally libraries were collections of books, manuscripts, journals, and other sources of recorded information. In the last 50 years, libraries have increasingly developed into a provider of information resources and services that do not even require a building.” The libraries’ traditional lasting objective is to provide access to relevant information resources. The aim of this is to give high value to the needs and expectations of users. Generating and sharing information is useless, if there’s no way to locate, filter, organize and access it. Traditionally librarians are in the forefront of information dissemination and they will continue to be there (Ramos, 2007). According to John (1998): “of all the roles that librarians and libraries play two are critical to modern society as we know it. The first is the role of the libraries as the place where the information seeker can access information without restriction - the access role. The second role has been the world-wide effort of libraries to archive, protect and provide ongoing access to information and the world's cultural heritage for the long term - the preservation role. These two fundamental roles have differentiated libraries from all other institutions.” In this vein to propose that libraries are “in the midst of a revolutionary phase, with new assignments crowding the librarian’s agenda, is to state the obvious” (Mokogwu, 2000). This is where the civic and social responsibility of the libraries takes center stage. Social responsibility is a part of librarianship (Kagan, 2005). The issue of national security is therefore core value of librarianship. Since no meaningful learning, education and development can take place in a context of insecurity and unabated destruction of lives and properties, the onus lies on the libraries for responsible librarianship through dissemination of information that can contribute to peace and national security in Nigeria by helping the citizens to understand their role in national security. The libraries as a storehouse of information has positively altered its scope of influence across time to become not only a place that houses books but a gateway through which information can be conveyed to people irrespective of location. Issa (2003) pointed out that economic and national power and status for instance are leveraged on the widespread use of information and knowledge which the libraries provide. Agreed that the responsibility of libraries and information services rests on the librarian and information scientists, there is also the need to collaborate with the security agencies in bringing maximum information services to the public and in this case for national security.

The Place of the libraries and Librarians in National Security

Libraries have always been a key contributor to national development and it is appropriate that they take a leadership role in the current movement on national security. National security is used by politicians and military leaders in the line of a policy objective. National security thus refers to the protection of the interests of a country this is where it takes a wide meaning as all-embracing dimension of national life (Hussain, 2008 and Iradia, 2011) because threat posed to any element of national power creates security problems. The role of the libraries in national security is not just to spread information in a particular area but to offer a holistic approach, around all aspects of the policies of the country called Nigeria. Currently, the war on terror and terrorism is not only fought by the armed forces but the whole nation is engaged in the economic, scientific, political and social activities and happenings in all practicable fields of life. For the libraries, this is an objective, which is achievable through the information and dissemination process of the libraries (Hali, 2003). “National security is the requirement to maintain the survival of the state through the use of economic, diplomacy, power projection and political power” (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/National_security). Information is therefore a crucial factor in national security. This is because the line between security and insecurity lie in information given or information withheld. The ability to use information and its associated tools is a source of power for any nation (Bordbar, 2000) which the libraries and librarians are best equipped to do. In Nigeria’s current security challenge, citizens and government must recognize this need for information use and literacy as a means of national security (Noruzi, 2006). Information remains the only product which the libraries handle and this includes all media in which the information is shaped. The only means through which the real integration of people living in political, economic, religious and ideological poles could be brought together is through the actual cooperation and exchange of vital information between the two: the terrorist and the terrorized. At this time, when Nigeria is still in democratic embryo, ideological divides which is the threshold upon which terrorism thrives can be countered through effective information dissemination (Propaganda and counter propaganda). There is an urgent need for provision of “right information, in the right format, for the right people, at the right time, and in the right place” to stem the tide of ignoramus decadence. Increasingly librarians have assumed the role of educator to teach their users how to find information both in the libraries and over electronic networks. The work of librarians has moved outside libraries walls. Librarians have begun to work in the information industry as salespeople, designers of new information systems, researchers, and information analysts. They are also found in such fields as marketing and public relations and in such organizations as law firms, where staffs need rapid access to information.

Though information officers and librarians may not be military people, because of their professional background, they are usually equipped to provide technical information services to experts in other fields using the language they understand most since language is a synergy. In providing information services, librarians may need to adopt campaigning or mobile libraries to bring libraries services to the doorsteps of citizens to educate them on national security. Nwalo (2003) observed that the compilations made by mobile libraries reflect perceived needs of local communities. This will help to provide security services to communities and help citizens and patrons of the libraries attain maximum information services, in spite of their vocations. Since information is a transformation agent, a shaper of perspectives and philosophies of life, the onus lies on libraries as information centers and librarians as information managers to ensure that Nigerians have access to information that will direct their actions. Information therefore is a sine qua non for individual and collective freedom and attainment of national security. Anasi (2010) citing Sokari (2006) agrees that “information is necessary for people to be liberated from the shackles of ignorance, misconceptions, economic stagnation, social unrest, and political instability. Social cohesion cannot be achieved without timely, accurate, and relevant information.” This is because information is fresh ideas or fact taken out of a person’s surrounding for use with the objective of transforming behaviour in all areas of human life. Currently, the electronic media is one of the most effective and powerful means of mass mobilization. A nation not mobilized enough to withstand terrorism cannot aspire to preserve its freedom, faith and ideology for long. On the other hand, strongly mobilized people cannot be forced to abandon their security in the face of terrorism. It is in this regard that libraries and librarians can ginger up the electronic media to promote and expand security awareness among the people at large. (Ngozi, 2013) The libraries through the media has been waging war of its own to counter the hostile propaganda from insurgents and terrorists in Nigeria. Interestingly too their names suggests propaganda: Movement for the Emancipation of the Niger Delta (MEND) and Boko Haram (Western Education is nonsense), the government through the libraries can fund effective counter propaganda campaigns that will sensitize the citizens to the ills of terrorism and win over their sympathizers. (Echezona, 2007) One of the most effective means of maintaining national security is through propaganda and the primary tool of propaganda is the media. Some of the techniques adopted in a conflict to gain the desired results are repeating the lies of the terrorists, attacking personal opinions disguised as fact, headlining propaganda, selective control of information and the yellow journalism (Gamble and Kwerliambl, 1990). Thus, the role played by the libraries and librarians is a morale-boosting role. “In the military parlance, morale is the will to fight for the national cause to the last” (Hussain, 2008). Thus, in the war on terror, psychological operation is not the only function which the libraries can perform in the context of national security; it can act as a bridge between the armed forces and the people (Hali, 2003). The libraries provide not only information resources and guidance, but it is also a judgment-free zone in which a citizen can investigate interests of the terrorists without worry of embarrassment or exposure. A greater understanding of the differences and similarities between peoples of the world can potentially initiate and expand feelings of tolerance and empathy for cultures, religions and traditions outside of one’s immediate sphere. This the libraries can provide. Omotayo (2005) noted that: “in war situations in enlightened societies, use of libraries increases as users flock to libraries to find information to guide them. Information that can promote peace, unity, progress, peaceful co-existence, and harmonious relationship among all the communities must therefore be available in libraries. Librarians, therefore, in promoting access to this information, act as agents of the promotion of communal peace and reconciliation.” The importance of libraries to the Nigerian society can be seen through the statistics of people who use the libraries to gain access to print media. The majority of people who use libraries usually do so through the public or university libraries system in their communities. People throughout the country rely on public or university libraries as a provider of access to print and electronic information, access to email, assistance with information gathering and leisure reading (Becker, 2003). Some people choose to only engage the world through information sources that reinforce their views and reassure them that the world is exactly as they perceive it to be. Others are overly curious and want to know everything they can about everything. The majority of people who use libraries are unaware of what the government can achieve through the libraries as a base for information transactions. On the other hand, it may be that many are willing to trade their rights to privacy, free speech and unhindered intellectual pursuits for a sense of security. Libraries and librarians should be seen as important tools in national security. National security is possible through the utilization and collaboration of libraries, human, and material resources. Their desire for information might be driven by a school project, a story on the news or by simple curiosity. Curiosity and the desire to learn about the world can be protected and nurtured by the libraries. The freedom to explore and read about other cultures is vital to national security, especially as a tool to mitigate and prevent radicalization. The libraries and librarians indeed have a role to play in national security.

IV. Conclusion

Libraries and librarians serve a needed role in Nigeria and are utilized regularly by Nigerians seeking information on a number of subjects. It may be that the majority of government policy makers and drafters are unaware of what the government can achieve through the libraries as a base for information transactions. On the other hand, it may be that many are willing to trade their rights to privacy, free speech and unhindered intellectual pursuits for a sense of security. Libraries and librarians should be seen as important tools in national security. National security is possible through the utilization and collaboration of libraries, human, and material resources.

V. Recommendations

This paper recommends that:
1. Security agencies should as a matter of deliberate government policy work closely with librarians in the war against terror;
2. Libraries and librarians should be in the forefront of national security discourses through sponsorship, guiding principle and act can further the country’s national security;
3. The libraries and Librarians open public reading centers where people can have ease of access to right information;
4. The libraries and Librarians should explore the use of printing and pasting posters in public places to sensitize the public to the disastrous effects of national insecurity;
5. Libraries should mount extension services in rural areas to distribute literacy materials that will help people to be better functional information managers;
6. Librarians and libraries should design a blueprint for security consciousness.
7. The curriculum of various educational institutions should be redesigned to accommodate issues on national security for all students.
